MATCH PREVIEW

The first eight weeks of the Ericsson Cup have generated the full spectrum of emotions for the Canberra Cosmos. The team has enjoyed the highs of an exciting first home draw against Sydney United and the lows of some near misses to UTS Olympic and Wollongong City and last weekend's disappointing loss to the Brisbane Strikers.

The failure to record a win in what is shaping up as one of the most competitive Ericsson Cup seasons for some time would be a concern to Cosmos coach, Michael Lyons. But putting things in perspective, the Cosmos have just finished the first quarter of the season with a credible four draws and four losses and have achieved the first goal of earning the respect of the other teams in the competition. One feels that the goal of lifting the inexperienced Cosmos off the bottom of the ladder and into the top six will be a far greater challenge.

"We are still an inexperienced side and while I am pleased with the progress of younger players and the contribution of older heads, I think the mental concentration has been poor at times and that is where we have let ourselves down. The higher the standard of football you play the higher the level of concentration is needed and in fact it goes on to become more mental and less physical. Also at a higher level the difference is the amount of chances taken in front of goal", Lyons said.

There is no doubt that the Cosmos have the talent to pressure the Newcastle team. Players of the calibre of Armstrong, Dee and more recently, the much improved Michael Musitano, have troubled some of the highly rated defences of the A League and Lyons believes that the Cosmos' attacking options could be the key to tonight's game.

"Against West Adelaide there wasn't much thought in attack. We continually pumped the ball into the centre without looking at our other options. If we leave their defence in two minds and create some more space in the box, I know we can hurt Newcastle. The game is about opposites, you play long and the defence begins to read it so you have to change the plan and go short to bring the defence up. The same also applies to set pieces".

Newcastle are a tough team. They have had an impressive start to their relaunched A League campaign with wins over title contenders Sydney United and Adelaide City and will be a handful for the Cosmos.

Coach John Kosmina has put together an honest team and given young players an opportunity to take the step up to the Ericsson Cup. Some outstanding players have emerged, including the dynamic Clayton Zane, who has embarrassed some of the best defenders in the country with his strength and skill and excellent striking ability. But Zane is not alone. His striking partner Jason Bennett and midfielders David Lowe and Craig Sharpley need to be watched closely by the Cosmos Defence.

Tonight's battle of the new boys is critical for a Cosmos team anxious to stay in touch, and while Newcastle have demonstrated their worth as an A League team, perhaps tonight is the night where it all changes for the Cosmos.

From the LYONS Den

At this time two weeks ago I wrote of our expectation to record our first Ericsson Cup win against West Adelaide at Bruce Stadium. Unfortunately, despite really dominating that game we somehow scrambled a draw in the final minute thanks to a Paul Wade header. On reflection, anytime you draw a match during extra time you should be grateful, but to anyone who was there it probably has to be marked down as one that got away.

More thought was needed against West Adelaide. Players are the masters of their own destiny and they must be able to deal with situations as they arise. We weren't creative enough and really didn't look at opening up other goal scoring options.

Likewise in Brisbane last week we probably could have come out of the game with a better result had a few things gone our way. We were unfortunate to run into a fierce storm and head wind in the first half that seemed to disappear in the second half and amongst other chances our midfielder, Michael Musitano, hit the post twice. Ultimately, there are no excuses. If you are good enough, you will win and unfortunately against Brisbane we were not good enough.

Something that has been concerning me since the start of the Ericsson Cup and that I touched on earlier in the year, is the style and standard of refereeing I have seen. Not for one second am I blaming the referees for our failure to win a match. That is not the case. But football is a contact sport and should be played accordingly. It seems to be a trend of the Ericsson Cup that the matches are refereed as if they are testimonials and friendlies. A large amount of infringements are pulled up, often for insignificant or innocuous offences affecting the flow of the game and the capacity of the paying spectator to enjoy the game. It is often said that the best referee is the one you don't see.

Sports in Australia are generally contact by nature and we should be fostering this approach. We should not try to compete with football nations like Brazil or Argentina, by playing football like them, but instead play to our strengths which traditionally have been to have a big, fit team who compete hard and play with a great deal of heart. Unfortunately with the style of refereeing, our players are not learning to tackle hard and win the ball fairly, and this may cost Australia when we compete on the world stage.

The results we have had are frustrating, as it must be for all of our supporters, but I hope you can stick with us, encouraging the lads. It is incredible to think that some of our players have had a total of 12 hours of Ericsson Cup football and it is a big step from two easy training sessions to the grind of four hard sessions each week. As a coach I cannot fault the effort of all the players. Their determination and dedication to the team is pleasing and it is just a matter of time before we can turn it all around.

As coach I am not enjoying the Ericsson Cup at the moment. I am unashamedly a bad loser and it is a long 7 days between games. I feel that if we get a stroke of luck, correct refereeing decisions (remember Paul Dee against Marconi), put the ball in the net instead of into the post, have our disallowed goals count (remember Wollongong City), then I am sure we will change it all around.

I look forward to a big night - enjoy the game!

NEWCASTLE BREAKERS - A PROFILE

Statistician, Andrew Howe takes a look at Newcastle.

In 1951 a group of migrants from the Greta camp in Newcastle came together to form a football team. Recently arriving from all parts of the European continent, these men were itching to apply their footballing skills developed back in their former European homelands in their new home nation.

And so the Austral Club was born. Originally accepted into the northern NSW second division, the club eventually rose to prominence and won their first northern NSW first division grand final in 1966. Newcastle Austral entered the NSW state league first division in 1988, reaching the semi finals at their first attempt. Things then started moving quickly for Austral. In 1990, a major sponsorship deal with BHP Steel was announced, and together with an extensive monetary loan made by the NSW government, Austral vastly upgraded their playing headquarters. Purchased twenty years previously at Birmingham Gardens in Newcastle's western suburbs, their home ground soon boasted an impressive grandstand and was now - at least cosmetically - ready for national league status. A hard working committee, and the final recommendations of the 1990

Bradley report (where the national league was strongly recommended to accommodate a team from the Hunter region) saw the Breakers - direct descendants from Austral - set foot in the national league for the 1991/92 season.

Soccer fever had previously hit the Hunter region, and in a major way. Formed in August 1977 and entering the national league the year after, Newcastle KB United's home games regularly surpassed 10,000 climaxing at 18,367 in the game against UTS Olympic in April 1979. Former British football stars Bobby Charlton and Aussie Craig Johnston both had guest stints with the club. The club gained a major trophy with the 1984 national league cup. But an overall unspectacular team performance and eventually financial turmoil, saw KB United fold in April 1994. Although local club Adamstown Rosebud quickly stepped in to ensure Newcastle's continued national league presence, the club couldn't get back to prominence and was subsequently relegated from national league status in 1986.

Now Newcastle - the traditional home of soccer in Australia - has its chance for footballing glory again. Mistakes of previous years can only be learned from. Hopefully the Breakers can re-muster the support that soccer has within the Newcastle region. The Breakers management have surely scored a coup in signing former Socceroo legend, John Kosmina, as new coach. And together with a set of locally bred, young and enthusiastic players, led by the experienced David Lowe, Newcastle will soon again be the hotbed - both on and off the field - of soccer in Australia.

ACT ACADEMY OF SPORT

The Academy of Sport Team has had a mixed start to the season, and currently finds itself in mid-table. However, with only eight games completed out of 33, the season has only just begun, and coach Chris Tanzey believes that he has not yet achieved the right blend of players to allow the team to show its true ability. The main aim of the squad is to give the opportunity to young players to participate in a strong National competition, and to develop these players to their full potential. The nucleus of the squad has been built around more experienced Academy players from last season: Blair Machin is the first choice keeper, current skipper Steve Richards and Lindsay Wilson form the backbone of the defence; the Barac brothers, Michael and Anthony, are the lynch-pins of the mid-field, and Daniel Bennett is the front striker. In addition to these players from 94/95, Chris has introduced a number of new and exciting youngsters into the team, and is gradually moulding a squad which will be a threat to all of the teams in the National Youth League - this year called the Les Scheinflug Cup. Each team in the competition is allowed to field four over-age players per game, and one of these, Scott Conlon, an Academy star from last season, has fitted in well. Tanzey's other aim is to develop many of these youngsters to the stage where they will be good enough to be called upon by Mike Lyons for the Cosmos team, and also to allow some of the Cosmos stars to play with the younger ones and pass on their experience. Cosmos stars who have turned out for the Academy this season includes the Popovich brothers, Jim Baxter, the Ggetti brothers, Stan Dukic, Tony Lemezina and Leo Langone.

ERICSSON  MOBILE PHONES

From The Grandstand

After 4 of 17 home games, Chris Kunz discloses the quarterly report from A League Class at Worldball High for our young Caussie Cosmos:

Worldball High
Quarterly Report 95/96

Student: Caussie Cosmos

ATTENDANCE

Eighth out of twelve with an average 3708. Recent lack of success has not helped. (According to Stats Master Andrew Howe, Caussie's cousin Billy Breaker is top with 5395, followed by Adelaide Aristotle 4836, Susie Striker 4832, Zoe Juzebra 4650 and Ophelia Olympic 4626.)

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

It is delightful to see that a new pupil like Caussie mixes so easily with a very cosmopolitan crowd of varying ages in the school yard. This can only be said for three other members of the class.

DRESS

Caussie has very attractive sporting attire and has recently taken to wearing hats and even waving colourful flags – most pleasing.

RESPECT

Can't stand still at Advance Australia Fair, showing gross disrespect to his country. His father, who has cut his pocket money for such crimes as tardiness and not changing, should add this to the list.

COMMITMENT AND BEHAVIOUR

Teachers report that Caussie has been very keen to contribute and succeed, though this competitive approach has sometimes manifested itself in outbursts of aggression towards fellow pupils, who understandably remain wary. These incidents have been dealt with and it is generally felt that as time passes Caussie will feel as accepted as he has become.

SKILLS

Always a delight to see and should be encouraged. The recent arrival of young Michael Musitano has helped Caussie to adopt a more positive and cultured view of life and assisted his skill development.

VOCABULARY

Currently limited and needs broadening. Should be encouraged at home to express himself more. The frequent use of terms 'long ball' and 'high cross' needs to be augmented by others like 'low cross', 'wall pass' and 'cut back' to produce a well-rounded person.

PERFORMANCE

A quite reasonable start given the circumstances of his arrival. Caussie has been competitive and involved, though recent exam set-backs led to reduced attendance.

POTENTIAL

Virtually unlimited if Caussie is prepared to listen and learn. He comes from a good background and though all knew that his initial weeks of schooling here would be tough, there is an expectation and hunger for success within the family that we all hope will become self-fulfilling.

SUMMARY

Worldball High fully appreciates that performance has a direct impact on attendance – a fact that Caussie will need to keep in mind.

Being new to A League Class, he has had to cope with considerable scepticism and even hostility from other pupils (such as Tony and Branch). Generally he has handled the pressure well, but now needs to demonstrate he has learned from the lessons he has attended and will broaden his vocabulary and knowledge accordingly.

If Caussie Cosmos can do that, he will rise many places in the A League Class order of merit and all pupils and those associated with him will be justifiably proud of his progress.
